separated from the party, and riding through the streets with a pixtol in his burn, at the court house, last night, dealivered to an audience that packed the room, was a masterly edort in the happiest style of the distinguished speaker. He unfolded a great deal concerning the corruptions in National affairs, that came under his observation during his service at Washington, not forzetting to lay a heavy hand on Biaine. He also pointed out the fact that Judge Riddell's district comprised a large part of the State, and that the faliar to win, in the contest on Monday, would be heralded all over the union as a breaking up of the Democratic party in Kentucky, and would be used effectively in the National campaign. He herefore urged every Democrat to appreciate the necessity of polling his vote for all the nominees on Monday. The speech occupied about an hour and a half, and left with the audience a very favorable impression concerning the speaker's elequence and ability. Mr. Blackburn was later serenaded at the Central Hotel, by Haucke's band, and made a brief speech in acknowledgment of the contest on the left with the audience a very favorable impression concerning the speaker's elequence and ability. So-called) at the Winchester Convention; and How He Played Off on the Man That Wrote it for Him.

"I have plenty of authority," he answered.
"Is it based on the fact that you are in charge of the office and can do pretty much as you please?" we saked.
"Well, yes," he laughingly replied, "but the truth is I paid the postage on these things myself."
According to his own admission to the elitor of this paper he is the man who sent them out. He paid as he said the postage upon them, which ought to be one cent each, and is, therefore, responsible for their distribution at this time, unless he can show that he is acting for somebody else. The people of this city have the right to expect better things of their postmaster.

ed By a Drunken Main.

This morning Miss Matilda Wallace and Stephen Massie, runaways from Sylvan Dale, Harrison County, were marmaried at Aberdeen by Esquire Massie Beasley. They were accompanied by John Galvin, of Needmore, Nicholas County. They were mounted on horses and were about to return home, when Galvin who had been drinking heavily separated from the party, and riding through the streets with a pistol in his hands, pointed it at a number of men women and children. On Grant street near the new houses of Charles H. White, he pointed it at Mr. Williams, and as Tobias Hawkins, and old colored man, who was sitting on the curb-stone arose

An Interesting Decision.

Last Toesday evening a case was decided in the Circuit Court of more than a usual interest and importance. The point involved was a novel one in the juriss prudence of Kentucky, and its decision if will be read with interest by all the law-a-yers in the State. The direct point was the validity of an act of the Legislature per printed in the acts of 1881, Vol. 1 page 62 chapter 729, being an amendment to the state of May 5th, 1880 which regulated appeals from the lower courts to the Quarterly Court, and from there is of Circuit Court; the Court and from there to the Circuit Court; the Cute was the case of Thomas Purel vs. Clark & Watts, appealed from the Augor's Court and the Justice of Court at Sardis.
